

Welcome to the new caveshamans class site, a sister site to shamanscave.com The blogs from shamanscave have been moved here and new material is being added.

Why the new site? Shamanscave is still there of course, so why add another one. My reasoning is pretty simple, we just needed more room to focus on our students and foster a better sense of community, with class channels, video, conferencing, new material and our european class offerings. Shamanscave.com was originally created as a purely informational site with some additional bells and whistles, but while it undergoes rennovation to finish the process of converting the old site to the newest standards I felt it was time for caveshamans to reappear.

While shamanscave.com is celebrating its 25th year online, caveshamans has been around for almost 20 years and was the original site for students at shamanscave. What is old is new again as they say. We're excited about new ways to communicate with our students and the public, but shamanscave.com will remain as it was originally intended as an informational site and contact point for those searching for answers on their spritual journey.

Welcome to the new CaveShamans Blogs

Enjoy the new site and content and I hope we will see you come back as new material is added and new ways to communicate.

Gary Mills/niteshad